

UCL Culture: Experimenting with new digital technologies and tools that widens access to culture and heritage

Helen Pike: Public Programmer, UCL Culture, Petrie Museum of Egyptian Archaeology, University College London

UCL Culture manages museums, collections and theatres facilitating public engagement within and outside the University College London. Included is the world heritage designated collection of Petrie Museum of Egyptian Archaeology and The Grant Museum of Zoology the last remaining university zoology museum in London.

UCL Culture collaborates primarily with UCL researchers, academics, staff and students to explore and connect across disciplines to reframe questions and surface new ideas using our objects, insights and expertise to make connections with our audiences.

In this presentation we will share our insights in experimenting with new digital technologies and tools that widen access to culture and heritage through theory and practice.
